Abstract

Despite the continued denials of the government, lobby groups and the National Health Service (NHS) of vaccine damage, many people were aware that two brands of MMR containing the Urabe mumps viral strain had been withdrawn by the government four years after they were introduced because of adverse reactions. In fact, Urabe-containing MMR had been withdrawn in Canada before it was even introduced in Britain, solely because of serious aseptic meningitis outbreaks. The government and the NHS airbrushed out this major vaccine failure and GlaxoSmithKline continued to sell the dangerous vaccine to developing countries, where they still monitored its adverse reactions. This essay used the experience of Urabe-containing MMR to highlight the dangerous deception practised by the British government when they claim that vaccine damage does not exist.
